DAVID DAVIS.

some time, fearing to get off on either side lest the polish on his political boots might be soiled in the mud of party strife, the great embodiment of political virtue has suddenly flopped boots and belly on the Republican side, and by force of his own ponderosity sinks to the sear of his breeches in partisan mire. Notwithstanding the whole country saw him flop, and now sees where he squats, he swears stoutly that he is still on the fence. Of all the mean things ever done by the Republican party, and they have a record on that score rarely equaled and never surpassed, not the least is their capture and disgrace of this poor old man. Nobody was surprised when they bought Mahone. His commercial character advertised him for sale, and the country was not at all shocked when the bargain was made; but the weeakness of poor old David Davis, consumed as he has been for years with a ridiculous ambition, ought to have shielded him from their approaches.
